Marble Shaft For the Mounds Fort Pickering.

COAL CREEK, EAST TENNESSEE, August 18, 1871. The auction sale of the Knoxville and Kentucky road occurs on the 20th of September. The State's agents propose to sell its interest for eight hundred thousand dollars. At auction it will hardly command more than half a million. It should be purchased either by Louisville or Cincinnati. Both these cities must have access to the Gulf States and Southern Atlantic coast through Kuoxville. If this road, only forty miles in length, the road has been something over three millions, and of this sum about trated by diagrams and analytical tana and the central portion of Montana and the cen two millions eight hundred thousand formula. dollars were wrenched from helpiess dax-payers. The bonds that were issued are still held by the New York ring, whose bogus sales among themselves are daily reported in Wall selves to the west of the main stroyed; and that one third of the population of the selves and the selves are daily reported in Wall selves to the west of the main stroyed; and that one third of the population will be destroyed. The details are heart sickening.
